NO NAME SALOON & GRILL PARK CITY, UTAH

Park City was once a mining town, and the No Name Saloon & Grill (then called The Alamo) was a watering hole for miners. Locals claim that ghosts of the unruly men stop in to drink with visitors. Patrons have seen their glasses move — perhaps because they ordered the favorite drink of a ghostly miner. Keep a firm grip on the No Name Sour, made with a float of malbec wine and No Name Secret Stash Rye from High West Distillery. Nonamesaloon.net

NOTCH8 VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA

At the Fairmont Hotel Vancouver, the ghost of Jennie Pearl Cox wears a beautiful red gown with a white stole — the outfit she wore to the hotel's Christmas ball in 1939. If you glimpse her at the lobby restaurant and bar, Notch8, order her the Lavender Corpse Reviver, a classic 1930s gin cocktail enhanced with a lavender mist. Notch8-dining.com

PALM COURT ASHEVILLE, NORTH CAROLINA

The Omni Grove Park Inn in Asheville, North Carolina, has been nicknamed the Pink Lady because of the rosy mist said to surround the ghost of a young woman who stayed here in the 1920s and who now haunts the Palm Court, where she fell to her death. Guests trying to spot her should sip the Pink Lady, a mix of vodka, acai and pomegranate juices, and pistachio simple syrup. Omnihotels.com/hotels/asheville-grove-park

OLD GLORY NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

The 1920s continue to spook patrons at Old Glory, a laundry service turned bar. Bartenders have reported ice melting at an unnatural rate and beet juice exploding out of a jigger. The ghost's favorite drink is the Beet Happening, made with mezcal, beet juice, Greek yogurt, dill, lime and agave.

THE STANLEY HOTEL ESTES PARK, COLORADO

The inspiration for Stephen King's The Shining, the property has an antique whiskey bar offering Colorado's largest collection of whiskey, along with spooky cocktails, including the Redrum Punch (at left). Stanleyhotel.com
