

RAISE YOUR SPIRITS

When Chicago's Nobu Hotel, the long anticipated hotel and restaurant concept from chef Nobu Matsuhisa and Robert De Niro, opened this summer, its stylish 11th floor rooftop bar instantly became a place to be seen. The lounge offers light fare, refreshing sakes, hand-crafted cocktails, and sweeping views of the sparkling skyline. Nibble nori tacos, nigiri sushi, and black cod lettuce cups while sipping Japanese whisky cocktails accompanied by live music on weekends. There's also a stellar breakfast menu only available to in-house guests; feast on salmon egg donburi or a kurobuta (black pig) sausage breakfast burrito against the commanding backdrop of the city's mega trendy West Loop nabe. Reservations recommended. 155 N Peoria Street, chicago.nobuhotels.com

MICHELIN MARVEL

After months of closure followed by takeout only, Sepia is back with the same exquisite food, incredible wines, and even a brand new pastry chef. Patio tables on a quiet stretch in the West Loop accompany the bird's nest semi-private dining room and sparse indoor seating. With Blackbird permanently closed, Sepia is the Michelin-starred stalwart left standing in Chicago's trendiest dining neighborhood. It's hard to choose between equally delectable options like fluke crudo or sweet corn agnolotti in the four-course prix fixe, which is a shift from Sepia's previous a la carte menu or lengthier tastings. Chef Andrew Zimmerman acknowledges that it's harder than ever for a small fine dining restaurant to remain financially viable, but Sepia soldiers on. 123 N Jefferson Street, sepiachicago.com
